Jessica Feinbloom 1947-2016

Longtime Folk Music Society of New York member Jessica Feinbloom passed away Friday evening, November 25, 2016. Jessica had been in declining health for several years, but she took a turn for the worse seven weeks earlier and never recovered. She had turned 69 years old this past June 16.

Growing up Jessica Ferris in Queens during the Baby Boom, she was the oldest of three siblings. Jessica became somewhat of a bohemian who took to music and the theater, much to the chagrin of her parents. One of Jessica's first jobs after college was as the stage manager for an off-Broadway theater. Jessica's father believed that she should acquire some marketable skill, so he suggested that she become an optician, which she did. It was while working at that trade that Jessica met Richard Feinbloom, who was in the business of manufacturing and selling optical equipment, and the two were soon married.

Jessica and her husband lived for a while in a loft on the Bowery, before moving to a farm near Delhi, New York, in upstate Delaware County. After returning to the city, Jessica went to graduate school to become a psychologist, while Richard continued his career in optical equipment. Along the way they had one child, Abraham.

As a teenager Jessica had learned to play piano and guitar, and she loved many genres of music, including Broadway show tunes, Top 40 pop, Gospel, and above all, folk music of various kinds. While an undergraduate she joined the Queens College Folk Music Club, and later she became a member of the New York Pine-woods Folk Music Club, as the Folk Music Society of New York was then called. Jessica especially enjoyed the FMSNY's participatory events, such as its singing parties and its weekends in the country.

Until 2001, Jessica had always been an amateur performer. However, after hearing her at the monthly FMSNY open mic at Sun Music on the Upper East Side, the venue owner offered her a spot in a group concert along with three other FMSNY members. Jessica accepted, and for the next nine years she enjoyed doing a small handful of paid gigs each year. Among these were the annual Woody Guthrie Birthday Bashes that first took place at CB's 313 Gallery and later at the Bowery Poetry Club, both in the East Village section of Lower Manhattan.

Unfortunately, Jessica had multiple health problems that became ever more serious over time. For example, by 2002 arthritis had robbed her of the ability to play guitar, and it eventually left her unable to play the keyboards as well, so she depended upon other musicians to provide instrumental accompaniment for her vocals. In addition, progressively worsening kidney disease, which even a transplant could not halt, eventually made it impossible for Jessica to attend FMSNY weekends. She did, however, continue to sing almost to the end, but only for herself and her close friends who would visit her at her apartment near Lincoln Center.

Jessica's last public performance was in 2010. While she provided backup vocals on several recordings, Jessica's only recording of her own to be released commercially is her 2008 live performance of Woody Guthrie's song Woman at Home.

The Folk Process

by Ruth Lipman

Best wishes to everyone for 2017.

Sue Tobiason enters the New Year as a recently retired person. She retired in September after 26 years as a social worker at the Allen Hospital of New York Presbyterian Medical Center. Since then, she has been filling her time with musical pursuits, including performing a concert of the music of Dvorak with Riverdale Choral Society, and singing in the Allen Hospital Holiday Chorus to spread cheer around the hospital. Sue and Art made trips to Roanoke, VA to spend time with family for Thanksgiving and Christmas, something they could not do when Sue was working.

In November (when the weather was still warm) I visited Wave Hill and had the nice surprise of encountering Evy Mayer there. We had a pleasant stroll around the grounds and ate lunch on the patio outside of the restaurant overlooking a beautiful view. Evy told me about her recent visit to the Guggenheim where she was able to see an unusual and glittering display--a golden toilet. You'd have to be flush to own one of those!

It appears on a compilation CD called Open Your Hearts to the Paradise: the Best of the Woody Guthrie Birthday Bash, which is available from CD Baby.

Jessica is survived by her son Abraham Feinbloom, by her ex-husband Richard Feinbloom, by her two brothers and their wives, Roger and Julie Ferris, and Charles and Melissa Ferris, and by their children.

Jessica's birthday fell on Bloomsday, the date that in 1904 James Joyce's Ulysses is set, and Jessica took pride in being able to recite the final part of Molly Bloom's soliloquy from memory. The best way to honor Jessica is to keep on singing, and to remember Molly's emphatically positive closing words: "yes I said yes I will Yes."
